I'm using MAMP and would like to setup my Django project as a local development environment. I know I can use virtualenv and set it up like this: `$ python -m virtualenv venv $. venv/bin/activate $ pip install -r requirements.txt` But this way doesn't allow me to work with MySQL and other DB-related stuff. Is there a way to use MAMP to develop a Django site as a local environment, with the above virtualenv setup? A: Just run: `$ python -m pip install -U django_heroku` It will set up a local db, setup Heroku to push to, and it will modify some settings in `/usr/local/apache2/conf/httpd.conf`. Then your heroku command line tools should run `$ heroku local` Which is basically what Heroku local is for. Q: Has anyone used the IntelliJ JavaScript Refactoring plugin for typing nested functions? I've seen quite a few answers suggesting using it to do "nested classing" or "function nesting", but I haven't yet seen a real answer. I have an app that has: `function abc() { function xyz() { //... more code function baz() { //... more code function qux() { function quux() { } } } } }` Note that the inner function type has no parameters (just the outer function's), and the inner is simply a function that happens to call itself. I'm trying to find a way to convert that into code that compiles using the ES6 arrow functions and parameterized interfaces, but what will be translated
